Hi, my name is Jermaine Jackson, and I'm a student in User-Centric Computing II. Today I'll be running a short usability test for my class project. This isn't a test of you more so it's a test of the website. I just want to see how people naturally use it and what parts feel easy or confusing. The site is called YourAverageGamer, and it focuses on gaming content like reviews and community posts. I won't give too many details because I'd like you to explore it freely. By participating, you're helping me understand how real users interact with the site so I can improve its design and usability. Please think aloud as you go and tell me what you notice or expect.

| Hello, my name is Robert Hicks Jr and I am a developer for the webpage YourAverageGamer. Today, I would like to invite you to undergo a short test to determine the usability and overall quality of the webpage I am building. You can go completely at your own pace. I only ask that you try your best to complete the tasks. Each task will require you to locate certain information on the page in an attempt to understand the difficulty of exploring the page. Our page is designed to showcase gameplay, gaming products, and forum discussion pages for the gaming community! - User did not like how there wasn't any clarification for finding information

The “Thank You” note to conclude the test

Thank you for taking the time to go through my site and give me an accurate examination of it for future developments.

Your experience, assessment of the Usability Test

I found that it was easy to navigate and find general information; however, that was only because of the fact that I knew the site map and how to navigate it. A search bar would prove to be very helpful for pinpointing specific information. When searching for broad information, our pages and drop boxes proved to work well. Other than that, some overall clearer headers to create distinction might help users who are not tech savvy to find our information better.

Formatting issues were a major part of the usability and HTML validation process. Several pages were checked off, but a few issues were found due to font, sizing, and layering of the pages. An attempt to create an uniform site would make the site more accessible and easier to view as well.
